Secretariat BSI

A proposal for a new work item within the scope of an existing committee shall be submitted to the secretariat of that committee.

¹ The proposer of a new work item may be a member body of ISO, the secretariat itself, another technical committee or subcommittee, an organization in liaison, the Technical Management Board or one of the advisory groups, or the Secretary-General. See ISO/IEC Directives Part 1, Clause 2.3.2.

The proposer(s) of the new work item proposal shall:

- make every effort to provide a first working draft for discussion, or at least an outline of a working draft;
- nominate a project leader;
- discuss the proposal with the committee leadership prior to submitting the appropriate form, to decide on an appropriate development track (based on market needs) and draft a project plan including key milestones and the proposed date of the first meeting.

The proposal will be circulated to the P-members of the technical committee or subcommittee for voting, and to the O-members for information.

IMPORTANT NOTE

Proposals without adequate justification risk rejection or referral to originator.

Guidelines for proposing and justifying a new work item are contained in Annex C of the ISO/IEC Directives, Part 1.

- The proposer has considered the guidance given in the Annex C during the preparation of the NP.

Resource availability:

- There are resources available to allow the development of the project to start immediately after project approval* (i.e. project leader, related WG or committee work programme).

* if not, it is recommended that the project be first registered as a preliminary work item (a Form 4 is not required for this) and, when the development can start, Form 4 should be completed to initiate the NP ballot.

Proposal (to be completed by the proposer, following discussion with the committee leadership)

Title of the proposed deliverable

English title

Guidelines for organizations to increase consumer understanding of online terms and conditions

French title (if available)

(In the case of an amendment, revision or a new part of an existing document, include the reference number and current title)

Scope of the proposed deliverable

Specification of guidance to the providers of goods, services and digital content on the clear design and presentation of online terms and conditions to maximise consumer understanding and reduce detriment.

Purpose and justification of the proposal

Consumer Protection

To provide a standard which can be used by any organization, to help them create clear, accessible, fair and easy to understand terms and conditions (contractual terms and privacy policies) , which will ensure that consumers can make fully informed decisions prior to purchase or use of goods, services and digital content, thus reducing the risk of detriment arising from confusing, complicated and unfair contractual terms.

Incorporating the consumer perspective

It is vital that the consumer voice is heard in the development of a standard about online terms and conditions (T&Cs) as there is currently an imbalance of power, with many T&Cs drafted by organizations unduly biased towards their own interests and to the detriment of consumers.

Contracts are essentially driving B2C e-commerce. All online retailers apply a set of T&Cs to govern the sale. These contracts are known as 'adhesion contracts' because, unlike traditional contracts, they are not negotiated between the two parties. As the business drafts the terms and conditions, and can set their own terms, these contracts can exacerbate the weaker position the consumer holds in the relationship, making it more likely that detriment will occur.

Justification

As described above, the clarity of T&Cs is a matter of increasing relevance and importance to consumers as global markets and e-commerce flourish. The UN Guidelines for Consumer Protection (revised 2015) state in Guideline 14d) that national policies should encourage: 'clear concise and easy to understand contract terms that are not unfair'. Some countries or regions have laws that prohibit unfair contract terms, but legal requirements and tests for unfairness vary globally. In many cases, especially cross-border, a consumer's legal protection relies solely on the T&Cs provided by the seller. An international standard to provide guidance could help to improve positive outcomes for global consumers and increase confidence in businesses.

Online T&Cs can be onerously complicated and long, creating confusion and deterring consumers from reading them. It would take a little over three hours to read, let alone understand, the terms of service and privacy notices of the five most popular social media and messaging apps.

The Swedish Consumers' Organisation found that, when printed out, Airbnb's T&Cs are 39 metres long. Consumers International estimates that it would take the average person 76 working days to read all the T&Cs that they encounter online in one year. It claims that: 'it is now well understood that hardly anyone reads the small print before they click agree'¹

When consumers do try to engage with T&Cs, the documents often seem impenetrable. A recent paper on online harm and manipulation highlighted that privacy policies frequently require college-level reading ability, yet the average reading ability is much lower than this. The result is that many consumers often absentmindedly tick a box to 'agree' and that less than 1% click to view the full text of contractual documents online.

A 2016 study by the European Commission showed similar findings² , saying that 'T&Cs are often long and written in complex legal jargon. In some cases, they are as long as Shakespeare's plays. Moreover, if they want to complete the purchase, consumers have no other choice than accepting T&Cs. However, blindly accepting T&Cs may be costly, because consumers may end up with a contract they would not have signed if they had been aware of the content.'

It is strongly suspected that obscure language and excessive length of T&Cs has been used deliberately by some organizations to confuse or overwhelm consumers.

The 2017 revised UN Consumer Protection Manual states: “As the World Bank has suggested, complexity may be a cover for unfairness and sometimes ‘even direct fraud’. Research by the European Commission using expert advisers has shown that even people familiar with the financial products may not be able to fully understand the terms. The Manual goes on to conclude: ‘The problem goes beyond consumer comprehension; certain products may simply be incomprehensible, even to regulators and sales staff... transparency and disclosure are not just matters of consumer information, they are a vital part of the regulatory process’.

In summary, it is unrealistic to expect consumers to read the T&Cs of every online retailer they do business with, let alone understand them. However, this means that they often enter contracts without being fully aware of the conditions they have agreed to be legally bound by.

A lack of understanding of T&Cs leads to less informed consumer decisions and increases the likelihood of consumers experiencing detriment. For example, being unaware of: additional charges; early termination fees; lack of cancellation rights; or how personal data will be shared. Consumers in vulnerable situations may be at a greater risk of harm.

A statement from the proposer as to how the proposed work may relate to or impact on existing work, especially existing ISO and IEC deliverables. The proposer should explain how the work differs from apparently similar work, or explain how duplication and conflict will be minimized

The proposer believes that there is no other proposed or existing work involving ISO or IEC.

NOTE: Given the growing number of online transactions and issues with consumer harms occurring with online trade, especially cross-border, there is scope for placing this item in the work programme of ISO/TC 321.

Effective Techniques

Understanding

- Display key terms as frequently asked questions
- Use icons to illustrate key terms
- Use icons to illustrate key terms
- Show customers terms within a scrollable text box instead of requiring a click to view them
- Provide information in short chunks at the right time
- Use illustrations and comics

Opening

- Tell customers how long it will take to read your policy
- Tell customers when it is their last chance to read information before they make a decision

Techniques to improve customer understanding of terms and conditions and/or privacy policies

- Display key terms as frequently asked questions
- Use icons to illustrate key terms
- Showing the terms as a scrollable block of text in the customer's journey on your website or app means they can easily read the terms and conditions (if they want to)
- Give people information about terms and conditions when it is most relevant. For example, provide information about terms and conditions as customers fill in their personal details
- Use comics and illustrations to explain step-by-step actions and processes. Comics' speech bubbles give customers information about facts, dates, and figures, and their illustrations give context and emotional cues.

Techniques to encourage more customers to open terms and conditions and/ or privacy policies

- Tell customers how long it will take to read the policy
- Tell customers when it is their last chance to read information before they make a decision

Techniques with mixed evidence

- Present key points in a summary table
- Add examples and icons to full terms
- Shorten full terms
- Use simpler language
- Use a visual slider to explain fees

Additional information/questions

This specification of guidance to the providers of goods and services on the clear design and presentation of online terms and conditions to maximise consumer understanding and reduce detriment is proposed as a contribution to protecting consumers. The clear intent of the content of Terms and Conditions is assumed not to deliberately put consumers at risk of harm and should be intended to be understood by all consumers to whom they are presented.
